There are very few bands or groups that prolong the challenge of time, especially those formed in the 2000s. From Fifth Harmony to One Direction, both boy and girl groups don't really last long. That's unless you're talking about Little Mix. The British girl group won The X-Factor in 2011 and was the first girl group to do so on the British version of the show. They've been making bangers since then, but not that big in America yet. To really convince why Little Mix should be a hit, here are seven videos to show. It is also an introduction for them if you have never listened to their music before. Benett/Dave Benett/Getty Images 1. Wasabi Like many songs nowadays, Wasabi saw some popularity on Tik Tok last summer, but that's not why this song needs to be on your radar. It's such a bop, with many levels for the song. It has rhythmic verses, staccato and then more fluid, sexier choruses. It's a great song to practice performing, dancing, or a great hype song. As one of the top comments said, Everytime I hear Little Mix I become a confident sassy freaking queen, then the song ends and I come back to be a little potato.) 2. Black Magic One of Little Mix's first hits, and songs in general, Black Magic tells the magical story of wanting to use a love drug on a guy to make them finally notice you. While it is, of course, just a fantasy, the music video is so worth it. Four members playing this kind of nerdy or cymed girl have a big heart on this one guy. They took a magic book and began to sabotage the mean girl and help other less popular children in their school. It was fun and really symbolic of their big start. 3. Love Me Like You A retro-inspired song, Love Me Like You will remind you of a 1950s sockhop jam. It's slower and completely highlights their voice. It also has the great concept of the 50s in terms of longing and pinning for a guy who seems to be one-of-a-kind. However, the 2015 video shows that maybe some guys are too good to be good. No matter how much you mean, it's an interesting song that will put you in a cheerful, bright mood. 4. Think about us ft Ty Dolla $ign Think about us basically about when you're in someone that when you're thinking about them (that's a lot), you can't help but wonder or hope they're doing the same. Whether it's at the beginning of a relationship or near the end of it, it's definitely a worry or a thought someone might have. The song itself is also a really, really good vibe. Rhythm can be for dancing or just a nice background pulse when you need it. 5. Woman Like Me ft. Nicki Minaj Little Mix always has a basic or sometimes public message about empowering. Woman Like Me, one of their newer songs, is basically saying they're strong, outspoken, and sometimes don't really behave like a proper woman should. But they like a guy and are wondering, can they handle them? This also features Nicki Minaj and is such a good song to make you feel strong. 6. Reggaetón Lento CNCO original duet, Reggaeton Lento is entirely in Spanish as it is a single by Latin American band CNCO. Little Mix jumped into the remix, and it was a good song. It's definitely a different musical style that they usually do, however they do it perfectly. There are still parts in Spanish, and it's perfect for dancing. 7. Shout Out to My Ex Okay, time to head it off with one of Little Mix's best and greatest songs. It's the last farewell song. It's not belittling old, per se, but it lifts the girls' spirits. They are thanking their exes for making them who they are now, teaching them lessons, and also being out of their lives now. Honestly, it's like Thank U, Next, but obviously many years ago. It is also well known for Zayn Malik, allegedly, who broke up with Little Mix member Perrie Edwards via text message. It's the perfect song to shout lyrics, even if you don't have a former BBC humor that has put words to wildlife videos with hysterical results. Did you hear that man talk about... Two of the stars of BBC Wild Side.When I own one, I was convinced that he and I could communicate. I think if I talked to him slowly and reasonably, he would somehow suss out what I was trying to say, which is usually along the lines please don't urinate on the carpet. It indicates that phineas was not fluent in English. It's not even a second language. In fact, he could understand cats, squirrels, and pigeons better than he did in English. Or, just as likely, he grasped everything I had to say and simply ignored me. Why, he no doubt reasoned, should he put on his booties to go out when there is a perfectly good rug inside on which to relieve himself? Years of disappointment may be the reason I love this tape from the BBC: Walk on the Wild Side. BBC humorists have put words to wildlife videos with hysterical results-checking it out. Last updated on December 14, 2020 The dream of starting a business is one of many sharing. It's all about being your own boss, having financial security, and creating something from nothing through hard work, dedication, and skill. It's the rare person who has not pondered how to become an entrepreneur. I certainly did, and from an early age. I come from a long line of business people: my grandfather was a cattle merchant and wildcatter. My grandfather and father were in the oil and gas industry, and I was involved in everything from oil and gas to manufacturing, real estate, and skin care. In short, I have been a serial entrepreneur for the past 35 years. On the learning path of how to become an entrepreneur, I have made and lost millions of dollars, managed hundreds of employees, and suffered from anxiety, depression, insomnia, stress, and other health problems. I learned lessons from some of the greatest minds in the business world, as well as from my own spectacular failures. But one thing I've never done is quit, and that's one lesson about how to be an entrepreneur and succeed while doing it. What people get wrong about entrepreneurial spirit When I talk to people about entrepreneuring and how to become an entrepreneur, there are some common misconceptions that always arise. They're kind of always based on stereotypes that have permeated culture over time. We see them in movies, television, and even from entrepreneurs themselves. But like all stereotypes, they are overgeneralizations that do not allow us to see the true, profound picture of So these are the most common myths I hear about entrepreneurs. Yes Birth Entrepreneur It is true that if you come from a long line of entrepreneurs (as I did), you are more likely to become one, but it's not genetic. It's much more of a function that has entrepreneurs as role models in your life. After all, colleges and universities have been teaching all kinds of people business skills and entrepreneurial spirit for decades. Now, that is not to say that no born-to-advantage can help with entrepreneurial spirit. Money is a great example of this. If you were lucky enough to be born into a family with money, it would make entrepreneuring a proposal much easier. After all, sponsorship is an important part of any startup. That being said, most entrepreneurs are not born in money and still become successful. Add in how to do it later. Entrepreneurs do not have a social life This one is quite popular and sometimes prolonged by entrepreneurs themselves. There may be a kind of machismo attached to the image of a workaholic: a person is single-minded and completely focused on excluding other things. While entrepreneuring spirit does not take a lot of time, effort, and dedication, entrepreneurs, by necessity, need to be social creatures. No one rises to the top without an extensive network of friends and acquaintances. They are extreme risk-takers there is no getting around taking risks as an entrepreneur. However, successful entrepreneurs are experts in risk calculation – carefully exploring all options as well as potential ups and downs before making a decision. People willing to risk it all on a roll of dice won't be in business very long. They are super smart In fact, only about 26% of entrepreneurs have a college degree. While receiving or having an education cannot (or should not) hurt, it is by no means a prerequisite to becoming a successful entrepreneur. They raise money through bank loans and venture capital firms cap me out for you if you can pull that one off, especially a bank loan. You'll find that banks are willing to lend you money once you've become successful, but before that, you're lucky enough to get a cup of coffee out of them. No, most new entrepreneurs are raising money personally or through friends and family. Anyone can be an entrepreneur All you need is a great idea and some hard work. After all, if you build a better mousetrap, the world will beat a path leading to your door. Sorry, but that's not true. There is a lot involved in launching a successful startup. Not everyone has the time, ability, or inclination to do it. The truth is, the successfully share some of the same characteristics and habits. We'll go through the next one. 6 Characteristics of a Successful Entrepreneur How much is a great new idea worth? That depends. If you're Steve Jobs, it's worth billions of dollars. If you are Steve Jones, having content to work a job nine to five days in 30 years, then it's worth it the truth is that there are great ideas around us all the time, but it's entrepreneurs that bring value to ideas. So how do you know if you have what it takes to learn how to become an entrepreneur? Below is a list of some common characteristics of successful entrepreneurs. 1. Passion We hear this a lot, but what does it really mean? For entrepreneurs, passion is an excess of enthusiasm for their work. We are not talking about a passion for making money or getting rich. It must be a by-product of passion. The kind of passion we're talking about is a complete belief in how businesses, products or services add value to consumers. People with this kind of passion are willing to do whatever it takes to see that vision through. 2. Perseverance Rarely do human endeasts go exactly as planned. This is especially true in a start-up situation. No matter how good you are or how many times you've done it, things will go off the left field and smack you upside down head. Now, I won't tell you that it's fun when something unexpected comes out of nowhere and turns your world upside down, but I would say that if you have the perseverance to work through this issue, it will serve as a resourceful lesson for both you and your team. 3. The flexibility I put this right after perseverance because sometimes the solution is not a problem pushed through a problem but goes around it. Back in the 1930s, having wallpaper was the thing in. The problem is that it's literally paper. When it is dirty, clean it with water and other household products quickly soak and degrade the paper. The solution is to use a substance like clay to clean the wallpaper without making it wet. Then, in the 1950s, kindergarten children in Cincinnati began using the same clay as Christmas decorations. Pretty soon, it was repacked into Play-Doh.The most successful entrepreneurs are flexible enough to change direction when they need to. 4. Confidence As a startup entrepreneur, it is extremely important that you exude confidence in your business, products/services and especially in your own abilities. After all, you need to be inspiring investors, employees, and clients if you are going to learn how to become an entrepreneur. Arrogance, on the other side, can be just as detrimental to your business as a lack of confidence. For investors, arrogance is a warning sign that you will not listen to their input or advice. For employees, it can establish a rigid, authoritarian management style that stifles creativity. And for customers, it can signal a lack of appreciating for their business. In short, confidence is a must, and arrogance is no-no. 5. As a self-starter I've never met a successful entrepreneur who is not a high motivated self starter. Part of that comes from the passion they have for their business. They really like what they do and can't wait for Monday to roll around so they can start over. Another part of that is discipline. Law. tend to approach everything in life with discipline. Work is a clear example, but even entertainment is an exercise in discipline. For example, they promised their spouse that they would get some yard work done, but their kid had a game. Their answer is not to ignore either; it is to schedule both activities during the day. 6. As a calculated risk taker we've talked a bit about this before, and word computing is very important here. We all heard that with great risk comes great rewards. But too many people confuse big risks with stupid risks. A simple way to think about this is to buy 100,000 lottery tickets. It certainly fits the criteria of a big reward that comes from a big risk. But is it a smart (calculated) risk? If you're smart enough to read this article, you know the answer. So here's how an entrepreneur thinks about this situation. Instead of spending money on 100,000 lottery tickets, how about taking that money, use 50% as a down payment on a property that needs a bit of fix-up; and use the other half to fix it up and then sell it for a profit of $50,000? Now it's a calculated risk. 8 Practical Steps on How to Be an Entrepreneur When advising people on how to become an entrepreneur, I encourage them to honestly evaluate themselves. This is always much harder than people think. As human beings, we have a reputation for being bad at self-assessment. We tend to overestimate our skills and abilities. That's why most people think they are an above-average driver. Even so, if you are considering life as an ambitious entrepreneur, it is important to be as honest as possible when making these self-assessment assessments. Once you have a clear idea of your strengths and weaknesses, you can use these tips to build your business. 1. Develop your idea It is not a completely unique or groundbreaking business idea to become a successful idea. Rideshare well-known rideshare corporation Lyft was founded three years after Uber's inception. They took over Uber's business model and just tweaked it a bit. Just because there is competition in a field doesn't mean you can't be very successful when you start a business, too. Go on and use your competitor's most successful business model, but make it your own by identifying shortcomings and weaknesses that you can exploit for your own success. 2. Research, research, industry research and acquaintance with players, trade associations, and conventions. Research related products and services. It is not uncommon that the most profitable part of a business is not the product itself, but an antho support add-on product. For example, it is not uncommon a restaurant to break even on food and make only money on drinks. The reason they can provide a plate full of food for $5.00 is actually Coke $2.00 or $5.00 glass of wine you order with it. Finally, customer research. Things like average age, gender, shopping habits, shopping, health, wealth, social media, and status are all helpful in your targeting and marketing efforts. 3. Create an official business plan This step is often ignored and should not be. As a one or two person program, you may be able to get along nice without one, but once you start hiring employees, having a formal business plan is essential. Unfortunately, if you don't put it in place right away, by the time you need it, you'll be too busy to create one. It's always smart to do it up front. 4. Build your network No one can build a successful business of their own. You will need investors, lawyers, accountants, banks, as well as suppliers, industry contacts, employees, and a host of others. Start attending trade exhibitions and conferences, as well as participating in trade associations and online groups. These are all great network resources for you. 5. Check your ideaThe start is small, since there is no way you can predict any problems or problems that may occur. You'll find it much easier to resolve these issues if they're limited to a few test markets as opposed to global deployments.6. Turning customers early into fans Another advantage of starting on a small scale while learning how to be an entrepreneur is that you can develop more personal relationships with customers. Be sure to provide a great experience for the first customers to build the most effective ads there is – oral. 7. Capital raising At this time, you should have a proven business model with clients, cash flow and expansion plans. Now you can start raising money through investors, venture capitalists and banks. 8. Scale your business Take donations and use it to scale up your business to deliver maximum returns for you, employees, investors and early supporters. Final thoughtsIn my opinion, there has never been a better time in our history to learn how to become an entrepreneur. Old barriers to entry - access to large amounts of capital, expensive professional services such as legal and accounting, and personnel issues - can all be overcome thanks to the internet. There are people all over who offer these services as free translators and at discounted prices, making it the perfect time to start growing your business. If you really have a good idea that you commit to, then really the only thing preventing you from joining the ranks of entrepreneurs is you.
